Many of us have trouble sleeping once in a while. However, there are some sleep disorders that don't go away easily and can cause long-term problems. A common disorder is insomnia, which refers to serious difficulty falling asleep at night. People with insomnia might fall asleep very late and then wake up several times in the night. The constant lack of sleep can lead to health issues, from high blood pressure to depression. Insomnia may be caused by different factors, so treating it involves finding its root cause first.

Another disorder is sleep apnea. People who have this condition temporarily stop breathing while they're asleep, which in turn wakes them up. Usually, they don't remember waking up in the middle of the night, but they do feel very tired the next day because of it. Sleep apnea can be a deadly problem, so it should be treated by a doctor.

Restless leg syndrome (RLS) is another sleep disorder, although it is less common. RLS sufferers experience an uncomfortable feeling in their legs that can prevent them from falling asleep at night. This feeling gives them an uncontrollable urge to move their legs. RLS tends to happen more often in older people, and experts think it could be related to low levels of iron in the blood.

A good night's rest is a sign of good health. So if you're not getting a proper amount of sleep at night, maybe it's time to see a doctor about it.

36 What is the article mainly about?

- (A) Types of sleep problems that people encounter.
(B) Ways to help people sleep more deeply at night.

(C) A lonely man who often feels sad for no reason and usually gets up too early in the morning.
(D) A woman who has high blood pressure and finds it difficult to fall asleep at night.

38 According to the article, which of the following statements is true?

- (A) People with sleep disorders should go to bed earlier.
(B) RLS may cause fatal diseases, so it should be treated.
(C) Depression is a possible symptom of insomnia.

39 Why do people with sleep apnea feel tired in the daytime?

- (A) Because they can't fall asleep at night.
(B) Because they are more likely to stay up late.

- (C) Because they often wake up while sleeping.
- (D) Because they refuse to be treated by a doctor.
- (D) Most sleep disorders disappear as time goes by.

Smartphone addiction (上癮)is not made in one day. It first becomes a habit then it turns into addiction. With continuous and uninterrupted use of smartphones, we feel good about that habit.

My name is Sam. I will share my personal experience with you about how to get rid of smartphone addiction. I followed the "rule of 21", which indicates that, if a person does something for 21 days , then it becomes a habit.

The first thing I did was to switch to my conventional phone, an old black and white Nokia, and get rid of Internet connection for one month. I also gave both my tablet and smartphone to my father and asked him to keep them in his safe when he was going on a business trip for 2 weeks.

The next few days were very difficult for me. I was feeling like a drug addict(有毒癮的人), whose cocaine stock(古柯鹼存貨) was out. Sometimes I used my mom's phone, but her smartphone screen was too small. After 3 to 4 days I stopped using her phone.

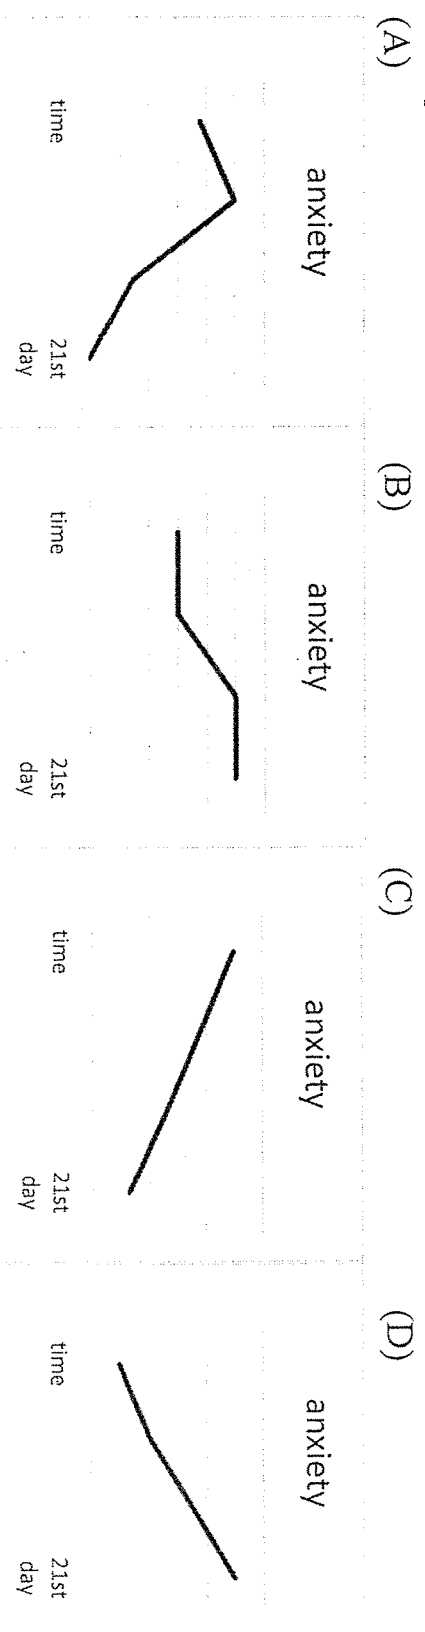

Magic started happening on the 8th day. I didn't feel the urge of using my smartphone, browsing social networking sites. I started spending more time in real world than virtual world. My study hours started increasing because I was able to decide how to spend my time. After 21 days, I didn't even remember that I had to collect my smartphone from my father. My father himself gave me my smartphone and tablet back after one month.

Now I feel that the smartphone is just a means of communication instead of a means of living. Now I barely use my smartphone more than half an hour everyday. Most of the time when I use my smartphone, I only use it to get some information from Google. At last I would say, if a person like me with average willpower can get rid of this addiction, you can also get rid of it. After all, it is just a means of communication.

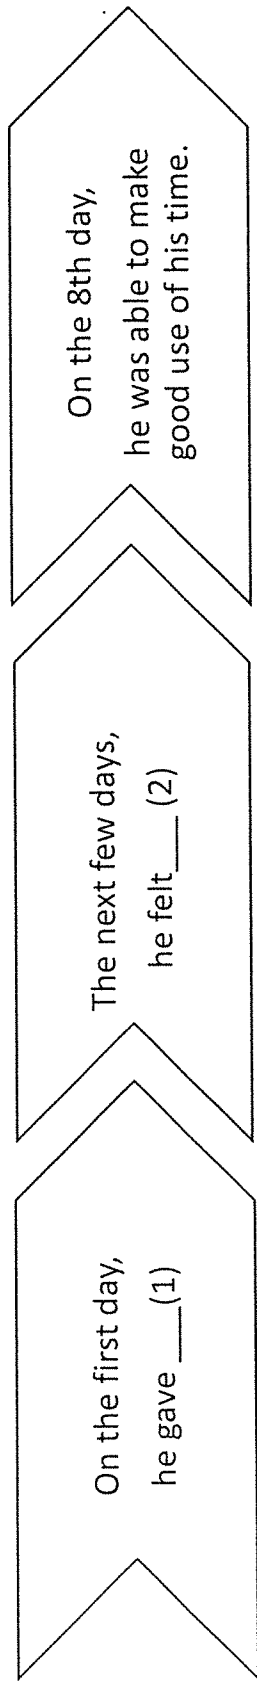

40 The passage is probably _____.

- (A) a study which shows how addicted to smartphones most people are .
- (B) personal experience shared to help people who have smartphone addiction.
- (C) research on how to use smartphones wisely.
- (D) advice given to get rid of drug addiction.

If you happen to have a box of spaghetti, try this experiment: Pull out a single spaghetti stick and hold it at both ends. Now bend it until it breaks. How many pieces did you make? If the answer is three or more, pull out another stick and try again. Can you break the noodle in two? If not, don't worry, you're in very good company.

The spaghetti challenge has confused even the likes of famous physicist Richard Feynman '39, who once spent the whole night breaking pasta and looking for an explanation for why the sticks refused to snap in two. Feynman's kitchen experiment remained unresolved until 2005, when physicists from France pieced together a theory to describe the forces at work when spaghetti is bent. They found that when a stick is bent evenly from both ends, it will break near the center, where it is most curved. This initial break causes a "snap-back" effect and a bending wave, or vibration, that further breaks the stick. Their theory, which won the 2006 Ig Nobel Prize, seemed to solve Feynman's puzzle. But a question remained: Could spaghetti ever be pressured to break in two?

The answer, according to a new MIT study, is yes — with a twist. Some researchers reported that they have found a way to break spaghetti in two, by both bending and twisting the dry noodles. They carried out experiments with hundreds of spaghetti sticks, bending and twisting them with an apparatus they built specifically for the task. Surprisingly, the team found that if a stick is twisted past a certain critical degree, then slowly bent in half, it will, against all odds, break in two. The results also benefited researchers to find applications beyond culinary curiosities, such as enhancing the understanding of crack formation and how to control fractures in other rod-like materials.

49. What does "you're in very good company" mean in the 1st paragraph?
