In the ocean between Hawaii and California, there is a huge collection of ocean plastic known as the Great Pacific Garbage Patch. This collection has pieces of plastic that weigh about 80,000 tons, and most of it is from some equipment used on fishing boats, such as fishing nets. Because of the sun, ocean waves, and temperature changes, these plastics can break down into smaller pieces, which can then be mistaken for food by sea animals. This is harmful not only to sea creatures but also to seafood-eating humans.

Cleaning up the Great Pacific Garbage Patch may seem like a long and expensive task. However, there's a new system that would require only five years and little cost. This system involves a 600-meter-long floating device that sits on the ocean's surface. Moved by the wind and waves, it gathers and catches ocean garbage so that it can be loaded onto boats and taken to land for recycling.

The system was created by 24-year-old Dutch inventor Boyan Slat. Slat began thinking of ways to clean up ocean garbage at the age of 16, during a diving trip in Greece, where he said he himself saw more plastic than fish.

- 44.(    ) According to the article, what is the Pacific Garbage Patch mainly made up of?
 (A) Waste dumped by Hawaiians.                      (B) Waste of sea creatures.
 (C) Equipment of divers.                      (D) Tools dropped from fishing boats.
- 45.(    ) Which is true about the device invented by Boyan Slat?
 (A) It's expensive and time-consuming.                      (B) It catches garbage as it drifts on the ocean.
 (C) It is powered by solar energy.                      (D) The garbage collected by the device will go to a landfill.
- 46.(    ) Based on the article, which of the following statements is true?
 (A) Boyan Slat is a Greek.
 (B) Boyan Slat is a professional diver.
 (C) A lot of plastic garbage is floating on the Pacific Ocean.
 (D) The plastic that has broken down into small pieces is not important to human beings.

The Earth may be over 4.5 billion years old, but it can still surprise us. Here are some amazing geography facts that will enable you to see the world in a new way.

Antarctica(南極)

When you hear the word desert, you might think of Sahara Desert, where there are sand and camels. However, a desert is officially defined as an area that usually has less than 250mm of rain in a year.

Antarctica is a large land mainly made of water, but the water is locked in ice. So, with its yearly rainfall at about only 170mm, Antarctica can easily be defined as a desert. Besides, this continent(大陸)is not owned by any country. It is governed by a group of nations in a special international partnership. In fact, it is a place for peace and science.

The Dead Sea

The surface of the Dead Sea is 430.5m below sea level(海平面), making its shores the lowest land-based elevation(陸地海拔) on Earth. However, it is disappearing before our eyes. It once covered an area of almost 1000km<sup>2</sup>, but it now only reaches about 650 km<sup>2</sup>. Dams(水壩) which were built stop the flow of water into the lake. Besides, factories pump water out to process minerals, lowering the water level. All of these are shrinking the Dead Sea.

Russia

Russia, covering 17.13 million km<sup>2</sup>, is the largest country in the world, so it is understandable that this country covers 11 time zones. Therefore, we can see that Russians on one end of the country could be starting their day while Russians on the other end are relaxing after a hard and busy day.

The Appalachian mountains and Himalayan mountains

The Appalachians were once almost as tall as the Himalayas, but they have been smaller and smaller because of the constant damage of rain and wind. In contrast, the Himalayas are growing upward today, by about 0.78 inches a year, because the earth's tectonic plates(地殼板塊) push into each other.

1.(     ) Which of the bars on the following graph shows the average yearly rainfall of Antarctica ?

2.(     ) According to the passage, which of the following is true?

- (A) Because the earth's tectonic plates keep pushing into each other, the Appalachians are higher than the Himalayas.
- (B) When a Russian on one side of the country is awaking at 7 a.m., another on the other side may be sitting down to dinner.
- (C) The Dead Sea now covers an area of almost 1000km².
- (D) Several countries own land in Antarctica.

3. The area of the Dead Sea is shrinking. According to this passage, why does the Dead Sea become smaller and smaller? Please find out the two reasons and write them down.

Painted in 1857, Prayer for the Potato Crop is one of the ___61___ French artist Millet's greatest works. The painting shows two poor farmers standing in a field. It looks like they are listening to the ringing of the church bell. They bow their heads in ___62___. A basket of potatoes lies on the ___63___ ground at their feet. Obviously, the two farmers are struggling to ___64___. They are ___65___ God for help and mercy in their time of need.

Millet added a church in the background a year or two later, which is a(n) ___66___ thing about this masterpiece. The church in the distance can ___67___ be seen, but it is there for sure. The painting later became ___68___ The Angelus, which refers to a(n) ___69___ Latin prayer that people used to say. They prayed three times a day: once in the morning, once at noon, and once at the end of the working day when they could finally ___70___ from their back-breaking labors. Today, people can appreciate Millet's The Angelus at the Orsay Museum in Paris.

1. Just out of curiosity, I organized a trip to two different Formosas. I first flew to the Asian Formosa, which is officially known __16__ Taiwan. This crowded island has a top-flight economy as well as excellent colleges and universities. What I loved most, however, were the __17__ mountains that run down its eastern coast. This region is home to __18__ beautiful scenery that I ended up spending an extra few days there. I didn't want to leave! After ten days in Asia, I flew to the other side of the world to __19__ Argentina's Formosa. The differences couldn't have been more apparent. The scenery was pleasant and very peaceful, but nothing grand like Taiwan had offered. The people were friendly, but there were so few of them. It turns out that Taiwan has fifty times the __20__ of people that the South American Formosa has, so the latter has far less pollution and noise. At the end of the day, I loved both Formosas, but for different reasons.

2. This economic report will examine the differences between the economy of Taiwan, Asia's Formosa, and that of the Argentinian region of Formosa. Taiwan is __21__ more populous than the Argentinian region, and is a prosperous country. It is home to some of Asia's best universities, most of __22__ provide highly trained workers for the country's powerful IT industry. Signs of prosperity are everywhere, from high-rise buildings to jam-packed shopping malls. __23__ its democratic government is strong and stable. It's thus an excellent place to live or invest in. __24__ Argentina's Formosa has little real economic activity to speak of. Even though it is __25__ the size of Taiwan, it lacks the manpower and resources to develop a dynamic economy. Ranching is the main source of income for those living in the area, a region where there are three times more cattle than people. If you are looking for investment opportunities, Asia's Formosa offers a much better business environment.

McDonald's is one of the largest fast food chains in the world. It can be found in 120 countries and serves almost 54 million people each day. It has been around since 1955 when Ray Kroc, its founder, joined forces with brothers Richard and Maurice McDonald. He then modernized their business and turned it into a nationwide and eventually a global company. Supporting this huge empire is a simple four-word motto, Quality, Service, Cleanliness and Value (QSCV). With this philosophy, the multinational company has won support from a wide range of consumers. However, being a global brand, it is also faced with different challenges and opportunities. Below is a newly released SWOT analysis, which allows McDonald's to discover new opportunities, and manage and eliminate possible threats.

Strengths

It has wide audience reach and market power over other competitors.

Weakness

Most of its menu consists of unhealthy meals and drinks that might cause health problems.

Opportunities

According to a new survey, home delivery service in the US will grow by 36.5% by 2020.

Threats

In the US, some fast food chains such as Burger King and Wendy's are growing rapidly, taking market share from McDonald's.
