Flying is one of the safest ways to travel. 41, some food safety experts inform us that in-flight meals may not always be safe to eat. According to their 42, food served on airplanes is more likely to harbor bacteria. We can 43 the long time between when the food is made and actually served for this. 44, consuming the wrong kind of bacteria can make one ill. 45 this warning, passengers still must eat something on long flights. So what is the best 46? The experts say that when dining 47 the air, some kinds of food are more likely to contain these harmful bacteria than others. The most likely 48 to make you sick include dairy, sandwich meats, seafood, and raw fruit and vegetables. On the other hand, food such as curry*, stews*, soups, baked items, packaged items, or fruit with a peel (such as a banana) are least likely to 49 you negatively. 50, if you want to reduce your chance of getting sick during or after your flight, be careful with what you eat on the plane. Airline meals tend to be quite large, so you don't have to eat everything!

Dante Gabriel Rossetti, the famous 19th-century artist, was once approached by an elderly man with some drawings that he wanted Rossetti to have a look at and tell him 51 Rossetti looked them over carefully. After looking at the first few, he knew that they were of no value, showing not even the least sign of artistic talent. Rossetti was an honest man, and he told the elderly man as gently as he could that 52 He was sorry, but he couldn't lie to the man. The visitor was disappointed, but seemed to take Rossetti's judgment very well. 53, but went on to ask if Rossetti would just look at a few more drawings done by a young art student. Rossetti looked over these drawings and immediately became excited about the talent they revealed. "These," he said, "oh, these are good. This young student has great talent. 54 He has a great future if he will work hard and stick to it." Rossetti could see that the old man was deeply moved. "55" he asked. "Your son?" "No," said the old man sadly. "It's me—40 years ago. If only I had heard your praise then! For you see, I got discouraged and gave up—too soon."

The Best Warm-Up Exercises for Runners

Ask your parents what they do before they get on a running machine at the gym, and I bet they will say, “Stretch, of course!” In fact, most people believe all the warm-up they need before running is simple stretching. Actually, there are two types of stretching. One is static stretching, where you hold a stretch without moving. The other is dynamic stretching, where you move through a range of motion. The purpose of a warm-up is to get the muscle groups ready for running. Most experts and running coaches no longer consider static stretching a proper warm-up for running because it makes you run more slowly and it can also increase your risk of injury. Dynamic stretching, on the other hand, includes exercises that get your muscles moving and thus warm up the parts of your body that you will use during a run. Before you run, do about ten minutes of dynamic stretching. This will provide an effective warm-up. It improves blood flow, prepares the muscles, increases range of motion, and makes your running smooth.

The runners that I coach do a dynamic warm-up before every run. It helps them prepare for their workout. It’s especially important to do a dynamic warm-up if you are running a race. A complete dynamic warm-up prevents injuries and makes you a better runner.

66. Who may be the writer of the passage?
- (A) A fitness coach. (B) An owner of a gym.
- (C) A sporting event sponsor. (D) An experienced marathon runner.
67. How is the information in the text organized?
- (A) The author compares the advantages and disadvantages of dynamic warm-up exercises.
- (B) The author offers personal experience about how proper warm-up exercises helped him.
- (C) The author explains why dynamic warm-up exercises are better than static warm-up exercises.
- (D) The author provides medical proof that dynamic warm-up exercises are helpful.

Homeschooling has been growing quickly over the last decade. For example, it is estimated that from 2015 to 2020, the number of American families that started homeschooling doubled. Yet homeschooling is still subject to myths and misunderstandings. First of all, most people think that homeschoolers don't socialize as much as those who attend traditional schools. The truth, however, is that homeschoolers can socialize more. For them, learning takes place in more places than inside a classroom. By routinely visiting museums, parks, science centers, and other places, they have more opportunities to socialize with adults and other people.

In addition, people might have the impression that homeschoolers do not go to college. In fact, homeschoolers are more likely to attend college than traditionally schooled students. Furthermore, when homeschoolers are enrolled, they are also more likely to stay in and graduate. Other data suggests that homeschooled students generally perform better on tests. Another incorrect claim is that homeschoolers lack the opportunity to play sports or participate in extracurricular activities. What most people don't know is that many public schools allow homeschoolers to play on school sports teams or participate in other after-school activities. One key benefit of homeschooling is flexibility for families, so there is no shortage of time for kids to be active outside their daily learning. Since homeschooling is personalized by its nature, you can mold it to best fit your family's needs.
