Paragraph B

Taiwan isn't the only place that has food with strange names, like coffin bread or cow's tongue cookies. In fact, unusually named foods can be found around the world. Welsh rabbit is one such example. Don't be fooled by the name, as no rabbits are harmed in the making of Welsh rabbit. It is a simple dish of toast covered with melted cheese and sometimes sauces, spices, and even beer. The dish is eaten across the UK and likely doesn't come from Wales. Historians believe it got its name because of a joke.

Head cheese is another example. Despite its name, there is no cheese in this food. It's actually a cold, savory jelly made with meat from a calf or pig's head. The dish was developed in Europe hundreds of years ago when wealthy people got all the good meat. As a result, poorer people had to be creative with what was left. Though head cheese is less common these days, it can still be found in countries from Scotland to Spain.

Part 7: Short Passage Questions (10%)

Read each paragraph and answer the questions.

Taiwan has been in the spotlight recently. The island is not only home to some of the world's most important tech companies, but it has also been the birthplace of many CEOs of the most competitive chip manufacturers in the world. Jensen Huang, the founder and CEO of Nvidia, is one among them.

Huang was born and raised in Taiwan before moving to the US at the age of nine. He got his first job at 15, working as a dishwasher in a restaurant. After graduating from college, he secured a position as a chip designer at Advanced Micro Devices (AMD). He then used his experience to found Nvidia in 1993, but it wasn't successful at first. The company almost went broke in 1997 as it struggled to finish the development of the RIVA 128 chip. Nvidia may have failed if it weren't for another Taiwanese tech giant: TSMC.

Huang wrote a letter to Morris Chang, TSMC's founder, asking him to cooperate on the chip's design and help cover some of its production costs. Chang agreed, and TSMC's timely assistance enabled Nvidia to achieve its first commercial success. Now, nearly three decades later, their partnership is still going strong.

- () 41. What is the passage mainly about?
 (A) Taiwan's role in chip manufacturing in the world.
 (B) Jensen Huang's road to success.
 (C) Great CEOs who call Taiwan home.
 (D) The rise and fall of Nvidia.
- () 42. What did Huang do when he was nine?
 (A) He visited Taiwan for the first time.
 (B) He set a goal of starting a company.
 (C) He began learning about computers.
 (D) He moved from Taiwan to America.
- () 43. What do we know about Huang's work experience before he started Nvidia?
 (A) He worked as a waiter at a restaurant.
 (B) He taught at a college.
 (C) He washed dishes at a restaurant.
 (D) He helped found AMD.
- () 44. What happened when Huang started Nvidia?
 (A) It became an instant success.
 (B) It almost failed within a few years.
 (C) It immediately became AMD's biggest competitor.
 (D) It made a huge profit because of the RIVA 128 chip.
- () 45. Why is TSMC important to Nvidia's development, based on the passage?
 (A) TSMC provided Nvidia with financial support when it needed it.
 (B) TSMC helped Nvidia find the problem with the RIVA 128 chip.
 (C) TSMC introduced Nvidia to the chip industry in Taiwan.
 (D) TSMC cooperated with Nvidia to compete with AMD.
