Part 6: Short Passage Questions (10%)

Read the paragraph and answer the questions.

Paragraph A

"Spoiling" a movie, book, or TV show means to reveal the ending or other key plot details to someone who has not reached that part yet. When faced with a spoiler alert, some people listen eagerly, while others quickly cover their ears to avoid finding out what happens. Despite many people's dislike of spoilers, they may not always be a bad thing.

Research suggests that spoilers do not necessarily ruin enjoyment. In fact, they can sometimes improve it. In one study, researchers revealed the ending of a story or television show to participants before they read or watched it. Afterward, the participants were asked whether they still enjoyed reading or watching it. Surprisingly, many of them reported that knowing the ending in advance actually increased their enjoyment rather than reducing it.

For some people, suspense can feel stressful, even when the story is fictional. Learning the outcome ahead of time allows them to relax and pay closer attention to other details of the plot. Still, not everyone feels this way. Many people try hard to avoid spoilers. They carefully scroll through social media and skip related content until they are certain it reveals nothing important.

- ( ) 51. What does “spoiling” a movie, book, or TV show mean?
(A) Watching it several times in a row.
(B) Stopping watching or reading halfway.
(C) Giving negative reviews after reading or watching.
(D) Revealing key plot details before someone sees it.
- ( ) 52. What did the study on spoilers find?
(A) Knowing the ending may actually increase enjoyment.
(B) Knowing the ending always reduces enjoyment of a story.
(C) Spoilers reduce enjoyment more in books than in TV shows.
(D) Participants feel bored when they know the ending in advance.
- ( ) 53. Why might some people prefer to know the outcome before reading or watching?
(A) They want to guess the ending for fun.
(B) They want to relax because suspense can feel stressful.
(C) They don’t want to spend too much time.
(D) They feel satisfied if they know the ending before others.

- ( ) 54. How do some people avoid spoilers, according to the passage?

- (A) By spending less time on social media.
(B) By watching the ending of the story first.
(C) By paying close attention while on social media.
(D) By warning friends not to reveal key details online.

- ( ) 55. What is the best title for this passage?

- (A) How Social Media Makes Spoilers Worse
(B) Spoilers: One Person’s Poison, Another’s Pleasure
(C) The Surprising Effects of Spoilers on Health
(D) Suspense: An Element That Makes Stories More Fun

Paragraph B

You’ve probably experienced this: while scrolling online, a headline grabs your attention—something like “Idol’s Angry Outburst Surprises Fans.” Excited to read the story, you click, only to find a page full of advertisements and a story that barely matches the headline. This is the work of clickbait, which tricks readers into clicking links for the site’s benefit.

Clickbait works by appealing to emotions and natural human urges. Websites earn money from ads, so more clicks mean higher profits. One common method is using exaggerated headlines about famous people to arouse readers’ natural curiosity about gossip. Another is crafting fear-based titles that make people feel they must click to stay safe or informed. For example, a headline might read, “Experts Warn You Should NEVER Charge Your Phone This Way.”

A third method, called rage-bait, is designed to make readers angry. Headlines like “New Soda Is Just Water in a Fancy Bottle” spark strong emotions that push readers to click and see the full story. By targeting curiosity, fear, or anger, clickbait manipulates emotions to get the most clicks, often leaving readers frustrated or disappointed with the actual content.

- ( ) 56. What is clickbait?
(A) A story that closely matches its headline.
(B) A method to help readers quickly find news links.
(C) A type of advertisement that is low in quality.
(D) A way websites trick readers into clicking links for profit.

- ( ) 57. Why do websites use clickbait, according to the passage?
(A) To earn more money.
(B) To entertain online users.
(C) To study users’ preferences.
(D) To reduce traffic on their sites.

- ( ) 58. Which of the following is an example of a fear-based clickbait headline?
(A) “Famous Actor Caught on a Secret Date Late at Night”
(B) “Things You Should Never Put Next to Your Bed”
(C) “New Movie Receives Mixed Reviews from Critics”
(D) “Local Restaurant Demands Shockingly High Prices”

- ( ) 59. Which of the following phrases can replace “manipulate” in the last paragraph?
(A) Keep an eye on.
(B) Make room for.
(C) Take advantage of.
(D) Reach out to.

- ( ) 60. What is the purpose of this passage?
(A) To explain how a common online trap works.
(B) To encourage readers to create their own online headlines.
(C) To introduce the latest trends in digital advertising.
(D) To remind readers about the importance of balanced news.

B.

Did you know that tiny bubbles are good for you? Sparkling water, also known as soda water or carbonated water, isn't just a fun drink – it's healthy, too!

Sugar and artificial colors are added to many drinks, making them harmful. But studies have shown that sparkling water without those same added ingredients can be healthy.

Because carbonated water is so refreshing, many people choose it over plain water. But it doesn't just taste better. It helps keep the body hydrated. This leads to healthy skin, the ability to think clearly, heart health, muscle function and more.

Drinking sparkling water also assists in swallowing and digesting food. It's believed to give a full feeling, which helps with weight control.

Since ancient times, people have appreciated natural spring water for its health benefits. But the first sparkling water wasn't recorded for drinking use until 1767. In that year, the English scientist Joseph Priestley invented "soda water" by adding CO<sub>2</sub> gas to the water. At that time people began mixing carbonated water with other sweet liquids. Soft drinks, however, didn't explode in popularity until the 1900s. Today, sparkling water has become part of our daily diet.

For a long time, though, people have worried that carbonated water would harm their bones. But there is still no evidence to prove it. In fact, just the opposite might be true. One organization suggests that carbonated water might actually improve bone health.

Some people are also concerned that carbonated drinks will harm their teeth. But sparkling water has been proven to have minimal negative effects on teeth, especially when compared to drinks with sugar.

Many people who are aware of the health advantages buy machines to make carbonated water at home. They sometimes add things like fruit and other healthy additions to create custom waters.

From improved concentration to weight management, sparkling water proves that bubbles really can make your life better!

57. Why is sparkling water thought of as healthy?

- A. It helps water go to where it's needed in your body.
- B. It helps people notice if they're drinking water.
- C. It helps your muscles get bigger and stronger.
- D. It helps break down food that you eat.

58. Why are people worried about drinking sparkling water?

- A. They wonder if it will damage their teeth.
- B. They believe it will make them gain weight.
- C. They think it can cause serious illnesses.
- D. They question the amount of sugar in the water.

59. What do we know about the history of sparkling water?

- A. A scientist wanted his children to drink more water so he created this.
- B. A scientist was trying to prove that water could be changed.
- C. A scientist added something to water to create it.
- D. A scientist was making medicine and accidentally made it.

60. According to the reading, what makes sparkling water

a better choice than many other popular drinks?

- A. It has more colors and smells better than plain water.
- B. It usually does not have sugar or artificial colors.
- C. It is the only drink that humans have had since ancient times.
- D. It helps people fall asleep much faster at night.
